AFL-CIO Prepares for Janus Decision With New Ad Campaign

As the U.S. Supreme Court nears a decision in the JANUS v. AFSCME Council 31 case, the AFL-CIO has launched a national print and digital ad campaign encouraging workers to join and fight the wealthy corporations rigging the economy against them.

The case will decide the outcome of a lawsuit, funded by the Koch brothers and other anti-worker interests, that seeks to deprive teachers, firefighters and other public-sector workers of their freedom to join a union. The campaign features an open letter from AFL-CIO President Richard Trumka urging working people everywhere to stand together and speak up for better wages and safer working conditions. It also encourages workers to visit, <https://aflcio.org/freedom-to-join> website dedicated to informing and educating them about unions, how to organize, and how to fight back against corporate attacks threatening their strength every day.

“Show your support for worker freedom and rights,” said Robert Roach, Jr., President of the Alliance.

“Visit the website and spread the word using #Union on social media.”
